

1108 Cleveland Street
Lansing, MI 48906

November 28, 2014

Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington, DC 20554

Received & Inspected

DEC 29 2014

FCC Mail Room

RECEIVED

JAN 07 2015

FCC-Competition Policy Division

Supporting Net- Neutrality:

Net- Neutrality represents equality and respect amongst each and every service internet provider. Every internet-based company has worked hard to dish out there services and shouldn't be heckled by other companies, no matter how big or small. A company should always have a voice in who it wants to partner with and not be limited to the choice of expanding by a company it knows nothing about. Cyber harassment should continue to be taken seriously by everyone, noting that no one is above it and everyone receives the same consequence. In the American Pledge it states all should live in unison with liberty and justice for all and the creed should continue to be followed.

President Barack Obama made a solid decision about passing the Title II act, which treats major internet service providers, such as Verizon and Comcast, as exactly what they are; telecommunication services. This decision should benefit smaller companies by granting them the same internet speed, hence giving them equal opportunity to compete. I don't blame the larger cable and telecommunication companies for wanting to expand their businesses but pricing speed on internet lanes is quite a rip off. There are college students that need internet usage and are living on budgets. What about the people who can't pay for programs they really need; this type of decision would hinder individuals.

November 28, 2014

The internet should continue to be left as is. Equality and respect should continue to be expressed through internet-based business networks along with consumer affordability. Cable and telecommunication services will be doing the internet world a justice if they continued to stay in their own lanes and think about the nature of other businesses. There's no need for a company to go out of business because consumers can't reach their business page due to slow internet speed. I am an American who supports net-neutrality and understand that it is another form of freedom and justice for all.

Naquetta Young

Naquetta Young